“Where You See Yourself” by Claire Forrest is a cool teen novel that has topics like disability representation and romance. The story’s main character is Effie Galanos, who is a high school senior year student who has a condition called cerebral palsy. She uses a wheelchair to do her daily stuff. She has been preparing a lot for her future and college admission. She wants to attend a college in NYC which offers a major in Media and Society. She also wants to work at a company which focuses on digital media. But her journey not only includes education and college but also her accessibility. The book takes place in Minneapolis mainly because that is the place Effie lives. She visits a lot of campuses during her year and events take place during high school. She is excited but also anxious about preparing for college. She needs to find a good college with accessibility and a good college. She envisions a life far from Minneapolis.
